Mrs. Romilly finished her wholesale order and wheezed out like a grand old automobile of an early model.

When they were alone the partners gazed at Daphne's list and then at each other.

"What on earth made you take it?" Mrs. Chivvis exclaimed. "You know we can't fill it."

"We're going to fill it."

"But how?"

"Darned if I know, but—Well, we'll have to get a lot of sewing-women in and sit up nights."

"But the material. We can't buy those things on credit."

"Then I'll borrow cash and pay for it."

"Borrow where? You said you wouldn't trouble your brother."

"I'm not responsible for what I have said or may say. Besides, I don't mind going to Bayard, now that I can go with success. I'll call on him in a business way and offer him interest and all that. I guess Mrs. Romilly's name is good enough collateral."

All unconscious of Daphne's affairs, Bayard was approaching his office with the brisk manner of a triumphant capitalist. But that was bluff for outward effect. He was actually dizzy with loss of bearings and control.

Bayard had carried heavier burdens than Clay, and under the sting of Lella's whip had taken greater risks for higher prizes. The crash in the street had found him so extended that he could not recover without additional help.

That very morning one of brokers had called on him for a real of margins. He had to have thousand dollars or he would lose luffed from every door, Bayard gone to Wetherell's office—a mysterious sort of place surrounded by doors and secret service men to ward off the menace of spies, real and imaginary.

Bayard had unusual difficulty in passing the lines. The reason he soon heard. A new man was in charge in Wetherell's place, a retired British officer whose natural and affected gruffness was aggravated by the unpleasant nature of his tasks. He had only one eye.

He made Bayard describe who and what he was and what he wanted. Only Bayard's desperation gave him strength to ask this old Cyclops for an advance on new contracts.

Bayard went away in a stupor. He had intelligence enough to feel that he could less safely attack Wetherell now than before. He would seem to be implicated in the fellow's malfeasance. He would only advertise to his creditors that his vaunted contracts were worthless. Business men will endure much to escape such publication of their wrongs.

Bayard kept his head high till he reached his own office. Then he fell into his chair and propped his elbows on his desk and gripped his hot brows in his hands as if he were holding his skull together. It is the business man's attitude of prayer.

It was thus that Daphne found him when she opened the door narrowly and closed it behind her as softly as La Tosca. She was beaming with affection and importance, and when at her mischievous "Ahem!" Bayard looked up she was so pretty that he forgot himself long enough to smile and rush forward to embrace her.

She was wondering how to state her errand when the telephone rang. It startled Bayard strangely. He caught it to his lips as a toper lifts a glass. He pressed the receiver to his ear and evidently recognized the voice that said "Hello" from somewhere.

He answered in monosyllables of the least importance, but Daphne heard gloom in them.

Bayard hung up the receiver, pushed the telephone away as a bitter cup, and laughed sheepishly.

"Great convenience, the telephone! Just learned that I've dropped more money than I ever hoped to have. For want of a nail the shoe was lost. Oh well, it saves me from spending it foolishly. But if I'd had five thousand dollars—My God! if I'd had five thousand dollars."

Daphne could think of nothing more helpful to say than a casual, "How's Lella?"

"Don't ask me!" Bayard smiled. "Tell me. What can I do for you, honey, before I go to take some nasty medicine from the president?"

"Nothing dear. I had to come downtown on an errand, so I thought I'd run in and say 'hello.'"

"Well, hello!"

He kissed her and patted her back with doleful tenderness and she went out of his office into the elevator. Its iron-barred door and its clanking chains gave it a congenial prison feeling, and the bottomless pit it dropped into seemed even more appropriate.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Daphne wanted to run away from her thoughts and she walked for a mile or two up the deep ravine of Broadway. She dared not go back to Mrs. Chivvis just yet with her bad news. She thought of asking Clay for a loan. She swept the appalling idea from her brain with a puff of derision.

Besides, he was out of town, Bayard had said. She thought of asking Tom Duane for it. She tried to blow that idea from her mind, but it kept drifting back like a bit of stubborn thistle-down. She could not outwalk it.

At length she grew so desperate that she stopped at a telephone booth and brazenly called up Duane's number. He chanced to be at home. When he heard her voice he cried:

"Oh Lord, it's good to hear you. Sing again, sing again, nightingale!"

"I'm no nightingale. I'm a business woman, offering you an investment."

She told him the whole story. The name of Mrs. Romilly made him whistle. "Old Gorgon Zola," he called her, and added, "You're a made woman."

"But the clothes aren't made, and I can't make 'em till I get some money. Would you—could you advance me a little on the most excellent security?"

"How much do you want? Where shall I bring it?"

"Mail two or five hundred dollars to the shop, will you? And I can never thank you enough."

"Tush. It's me that thanks you. Don't you want more?"

"No, thanks."

"It will be there in the early mail and I may call round later to put a mortgage or something on the place."

"Good-by," she chuckled, and hung up the receiver. She was crying softly as she stole from the blessed booth, and she looked less like a successful business woman than ever.

Something made her think of Wetherell. She stopped off at Bayard's floor and rang the bell. Lella's new butler admitted her with pomp. Daphne walked past him into the drawing-room. Lella and Wetherell were standing there in heavy coats. They seemed to be a little shocked at seeing Daphne. She was horribly hurt at seeing them, but she chirruped:

"Just come in?"

"Just going out," Lella answered, kissing Daphne nervously.

"Where?" Daphne asked, with in-tripidity, as she shook hands with Wetherell—a prize-fighter's preliminary handshake it was.

"Oh—er—just motoring about a bit."

"Thanks—I'd love it," Daphne dared to say, almost as much amazed as they were at hearing her accept the invitation that had not been given.

She was quite shameless from their point of view, but she felt that it would be unpardonable to let her brother's wife go unrebuked or at least unaided and unchaperoned on a cruise so perilous to reputation if not to character.

While she was at the miserable business she decided to make a good job of it. When they went down to the car she squeezed in between Lella and Wetherell. Lella blanched with jealousy and cold rage.

They dined at Long Beach and watched the dancers, in sullen mood. Wetherell ordered much champagne and would not listen to Lella's pleas that he let it alone. He frightened her a little by his reckless mood, and Daphne began to dread the journey home in the dark with champagne hands on the steering wheel.

After Daphne and he had executed a funeral dance Lella was emboldened to step out with him. They talked very earnestly and he seemed to horrify her by what he said to her. Daphne could not imagine what it was. Bayard had not told her of Wetherell's downfall from power.

Wetherell confessed his disgrace to Lella in the dance, and Lella was sickened with the sordid outcome of her romance. She had played with fire and got soot on her hands. She quit the dance and asked to be taken home.

Wetherell felt that she had turned against him and he reached for the last of the wine to fling it down his throat. Lella grimly took it from his fingers and emptied it in the ice bucket.

"Chauveurs and champagne are a bad combination," she laughed, but there was a sneer on her lips.

"Oh, very well!" Wetherell sneered in turn. He paid for the dinner and tipped the waiter with the lavishness of a bankrupt. He tipped furtively the man who guarded his car, and swung out into the road with an instant speed that would have been prettier if there had been less danger.

Daphne and Lella were good sports, but they were not merry. Wetherell furnished all the merriment, and his was from wine and despair. It was the wine that brought out the truth. He had to tell Daphne what he had told Lella, of his misfortune with his badly old government.

He asked Daphne to explain to Bayard how sorry he was that he was involved in the crash.

"Your broth' Bayard's aw'ful nice fel', Miss Skip. He's got niceest lil' wife in worl'. Per'ly good lil' girl. Straight as a string—straight as they make 'em. No nonsense about lil' Lell'. I just love her—per'ly honor-able love. I'd do anything in worl' for Lell'—or lil' Miss Daffy—or o' broth' Bay'd. Tell him 'at, will you, like a goo' lil' girl? Tell Bay 'at, will—il'?"

Daphne grew furious. She felt now that she had justified her presence here. She held Lella fast in her embrace and commanded Wetherell, "Slow down at once! Do you hear? Slow down this car!"

Wetherell laughed: "Bless lil' heart, I'm goin' take you home. You're quite safe with me—quite. Man that's born to be hanged never drown or get automokilled—that's good word—automokilled—oh, what?"

They whipped round a somber jut in the road, and his searchlight painted instantly in white outlines against the black world a wagonload of sleepy children returning from some village church affair. They were singing, drowsily, "Merrilee we ro-la-long-ro-la-long."

Daphne and Lella seemed to die at once.

Wetherell groaned, "Oh, my God, the lil' children!"

There was nothing for Wetherell to do but what he did. He spun his wheel and drove his thunderbolt into an open concrete culvert. There was a furious racket. The car turned a somersault and crumpled in a shuddering mass.

Wetherell, pinioned under the wheel, was knocked this way and that and his beautiful head cracked on the concrete like a china doll's.

Lella was snatched from the car as if invisible hands had caught her exquisite body for a lash to flog a telephone pole with, then threw her into a ditch. Daphne was flung and battered and thrust under the car when it turned over. And then the gasoline spilled from the shattered tank and caught fire.

Underneath the machine lay the relics of Wetherell, who would suffer no more here. Close by was Daphne Kip, whom a brief unconsciousness gave a short furlough from torture. She was not alive enough to be afraid of the long, lean flames about the gasoline tank, though they kept springing at her like wolfhounds held in a weakening leash. They had not yet quite reached her, but they missed her less and less.

A small distance off, Lella lay still, in almost her first ungraceful attitude, oblivious for a few moments of the outrages the blind forces of momentum had wreaked on her with the fury of a Bill Sikes trying to beat a woman to death.

The chauffeurs and passengers of cars that drew up in lengthening queues ran to the scene of Wetherell's disaster.

At first they could not see Wetherell, but they saw Daphne and her peril, and they set frantically to work to drag her free. But she was so caught that they could not release her until they should remove the car. They pulled and heaved, but it was jammed into the culvert and the ditch so tight that they could not budge it, though they took risk enough and suffered blistered hands and charred clothes.

At last one chauffeur fastened a chain to the rear axle of Wetherell's car and to the front axle of his, and, by alternate backing and swerving, dragged and hoisted Wetherell's car upward and rearward while other men snatched Daphne from beneath and away from the flames just as they were nibbling at her skirts.

At the same time they disclosed the body of Wetherell and with huge difficulty fetched it forth. Still others found Lella in a heap, a toy with broken joints.

The last thing Daphne had known was the sensation of being shaken to death, a helpless mouse in a terrier's mouth. The next she knew was that she was seated on the edge of a ditch and leaning against the shoulder of a kneeling woman in evening dress.

A number of shadowy men and women hovered against the searing glare of the gasoline.

They arrived at last at a hospital. Daphne was lifted out and delivered into the possession of two curt young internes. She was stretched on a litter, carried feet foremost into an elevator, down a corridor to a room, and rolled out on a bed. Two nurses proceeded to undress her and bathe her. Then an older doctor came in and examined her injuries. She blazed with shame, one complete blush; but to him she was hardly more than a car brought to a garage. He nodded cheerfully and said:

"Not a bone broken, young lady, and no internal derangements that I can discover. A few burns, that's all, and a big shock."

"Is Lella hurt much?" Daphne mumbled.

"She is hurt a trifle worse than you. But she'll come round all right."

"I don't believe you!" said Daphne, and sighed, "Poor Bayard!"

"Who is Bayard?"

"My brother—her husband."

"Ah, the young man who was—The other young man was not your husband, then?"

Daphne shook her head. "He is no relation—a friend."

"Perhaps we'd better notify Bayard. What's his last name? Has he a telephone?"

Daphne muttered his name and number. Then her head was lifted, a capsule placed in her mouth, and a glass of water held to her lips. When she was restored to her pillow a sedative was within her to subdue the riot of her thoughts.

She wondered what Duane would think of her now. She remembered the money she had asked him to lend her. It would be in the morning's mail. But she could not be there to open it. Mrs. Chivvis might not dare to.

All her acquaintance began to march past Daphne's brain in review. Thoughts and half-thoughts and whimsies danced through her mind in a carnival of stupor and froxy, while to the eyes of the nurses she lay still and slept.

In another room Lella was shrieking and fighting, whimpering and moaning, a torn gazelle under the claws and fangs of tigerish pain. Abruptly there came a lethal silence also from her. They had succeeded in drugging her at last.

When Daphne had left Bayard in the afternoon she had found that he was depressed, but not how deeply. She supposed that his money loss was only a failure of expected profits, or the mishap of an investment. She did not dream that he was crippled financially.

Bayard was so forlorn, so profoundly ashamed of his bad guesswork, that he could not bear to show his face at any of his clubs that night. He had boasted there too often of having bought heavily of the stock. He had persuaded too many of his friends to invest in it.

So he went where busy men go when other places are closed to them. He went home. When he reached his apartment he found that Lella had given the servants a night out.

Lella had left no word of her own plans. After a forlorn delay Bayard called for Daphne. She was gone, too, with no word of her return.

At last the telephone rang. A man's voice spoke and explained that it spoke from the hospital.

"Is Mr. Kip there? Is this Mr. Kip? Mr. Bayard Kip? Your wife is here, and your sister, and your friend Wetherell—automobile accident—out here on Long Island—pretty bad smash. Your wife's not very well—better come out—as soon as you can."

The world recoiled. Bayard seized his hat, played a tattoo on the elevator bell, darted into the street, yelled at a taxicab with ferocity, got in, ordered the driver to "go like hell." He kept putting his head out to howl at him.

At the hospital he questioned the internes fiercely about Lella and Daphne, and had evasive answers. He did not ask about Wetherell, but the interne volunteered the news that he was dead.

That made the ultimate difference. Bayard stopped short in awe, his forehead cold as if a clammy hand had been laid on it. Death was at work. Where would he stop?

In the chill white aisle of the corridor his frenzy gave place to a sense of bitter cold. A chill white nurse led him past doors and doors to a room where in a white bed lay a chill white thing, a cylinder of cotton.

Lella's face was almost invisible in bandages; her whole body crisscrossed and swaddled. She was an Egyptian princess mummified. For a moment her soul came out of the drug at his gasp of pity. It ran about inside its cocoon trying to find a nerve to pull or a muscle to signal to him outside. The mere lifting of her hand brought from her a moan of such woe as canceled all Bayard's grievances against her.

Once Bayard's resentments and jealousies were swept from his mind, his old love came back throbbing and lenphg. His very soul bled and he dropped to his knees, his arm thrown across that bundle of wreckage which had been his choice among the world's beauties.

He was soon dragged from his communion with his once-more unconscious bride by the young doctor, who lifted him up with the unpracticed diplomacy of internes and led him aside, grumbling: "Say, what you trying to do? Kill her? She's weak and her heart's fluttering. Cheer her up if you can. If you can't, you can't stay. Better not stay, anyway."

Bayard apologized cravenly and promised better behavior, and was permitted to steal back to Lella. He took her one undamaged hand; it was as beautiful as the severed hand of a Greek statue, and as marblish as the cold.

The interne led him at length into the corridor. And now Bayard remembered that he had also a sister, an only sister, in this same tavern pain. His heart went out to her. He remembered, too, that they had a father and a mother to tell or deceive.

The interne assured him that Daphne's injuries were slight. She looked sad enough when he peered in at her, though she was far from the dreary estate of Lella. She was asleep, but she woke at the sound of his step, and, turning her head with effort, opened her eyes and smiled at him feebly and whispered his name, and beckoned to him with one weak finger.

Daphne's heart ached out to him; she hugged him as hard as her weak arms would let her. She searched her mind for comfort. She could think of nothing so comforting just now as a hearty, reassuring lie. She whispered:

"It's all my fault, honey. You see, Mr. Wetherell was taking me out for a ride. I met Lella. She told me you telephoned you weren't coming home for dinner. She looked so lonely that I asked her to come along and chaperon us. I'm to blame for it all. Can you ever forgive me?"

He was so grateful, so eager to be deceived, that he forgot her state and clutched her hand hard and kissed it in gratitude for a priceless boon. The nurse, returning, saw the deed and smiled, not knowing what joy Bayard was taking in absolving Lella of suspicion and loading himself with blame. At such a time we love to bow our own heads in shame and cast ashes upon our hair. The taste of ashes in the mouth is good at such a time.

Daphne's first visitor after Bayard was Mrs. Chivvis.

"Oh, my dear!" she murmured. "I read in the papers about your misfortune. Such a night as I had spent! I was so afraid for you! And to think that you were lying here in such pain! And I might have helped you."

Daphne smiled, and they clasped hands like the two splendid little business women they were.

"How's the shop?" Daphne asked.

"I haven't been there."

"It isn't open, then?"

"No, indeed. With you here?"

NEW TELEPHONE TOLL RATES

NOW EFFECTIVE

On January 21, 1919, the Postmaster General established new interstate and intrastate telephone toll rates. The intrastate rates were not charged because of an injunction issued by the Supreme Court or Cook county.

The recent decision of the United States Supreme Court empowers the Postmaster General to fix telephone rates, and the intrastate toll rates, formerly announced by the Postmaster General will now apply in the State of Illinois.

Be Agreeable.

The true art of being agreeable is to appear well pleased with all the company, and rather to seem well entertained with them than to bring entertainment to them. A man thus disposed may not have much learning, nor any wit; but if he has common sense, and something friendly in his behavior, it conciliates men's minds more than the brightest parts without the disposition.—Addison.

Runes.
"Runes" were the letters of the alphabet used by the old Teutonic tribes. The word means hidden lore. The earliest runes were merely fanciful signs supposed to possess mysterious power. The letters were even considered magical, and were cast into the air, written separately upon chips, to fall as fate determined, on a cloth and to be read by the interpreters. The association of the rune letters with heathen superstitions caused the first Christian teachers to discourage their use.

GERMANY TO SIGN TREATY

Erzberger, Head of German Armistice Commission, Will Make Suggestion in Berlin.

14 POINTS STAND--WILSON

President Declares, "I Am Convinced Our Peace Project Violates None of My Principles"—Copy of Treaty to U. S. Lawmakers.

Copenhagen, June 9.—Matthias Erzberger, head of the German armistice commission, according to the Deutsches Tages Zeitung of Berlin, is preparing a memorandum which, after discussing the peace terms in all their aspects, advocates the signing of the treaty.

Paris, June 9.—It is understood here that the Berlin government is sending photographically reproduced copies of the peace terms to every United States senator and representative.

"I am convinced that our treaty project violates none of my principles," President Wilson is quoted by the Matin as having said when he was made acquainted with the German counter-proposals to the peace treaty. "If I held a contrary opinion I would not hesitate to confess it and would endeavor to correct the error. The treaty as drawn up, however, entirely conforms with my 14 points."

When the council of four met Premier Orlando of Italy was absent. This led to the belief that the Adriatic question was again under consideration. It is understood that no further progress has been made by the various elements working on the solution of this problem.

It is probable that the allied and associated powers will comply with the German demand to state approximately the maximum sum which Germany must pay in reparation under the peace treaty, according to the Matin. This sum, it states, will be from 200,000,000,000 to 250,000,000,000 francs.

(The larger sum named, on a gold valuation would be not far from $50,000,000,000.)

An answer from Admiral Kolchak, head of the all-Russian government at Omsk, to the allied proposals has been received by the French foreign office. It is understood, in the main, to be a satisfactory acceptance of the proposals. Kolchak's reply, however, makes reservations concerning a constituent assembly and also in respect to dealings with new states formed from old Russia.

The South Slav delegation here handed to President Wilson a memorandum regarding the Plume affair, according to the Petit Parisien.

When the Germans are handed the allied reply they will be informed, according to French circles, that the discussion has been finally closed and will be given no less than three or more than five days in which to accept or reject the conditions.

WIRE STRIKE IS SPREADING

Union Headquarters at Atlanta Says 3,000 Telegraph Operators Are Out—Men Warned by Carlton.

Atlanta, Ga., June 9.—Union headquarters announced on Friday that information received indicated that 3,000 employees of the Western Union in the South either had gone on strike or would do so during the day.

New York, June 9.—Employees of the Western Union Telegraph company, who joined the Telegraphers' union on the assurance of the postmaster general that there would be no discrimination in regard to employees joining unions, will not be taken back if they strike, Newcomb Carlton, president of the company announced Friday. Mr. Carlton said that out of 40,000 employees only 710 belonged to the union and that the call for a strike in the southern division was meeting with practically no response.

WIRES TURNED BACK SUFFRAGE WINS OUT

OWNERS TO TAKE OVER OPERATION OF LINES.

Control, However, Is Still to Be Exercised by Government, Says Burleson.

Washington, June 7.—Postmaster General Burleson issued an order on Thursday returning the telephone and telegraph systems of the country to the owners for operating purposes. Control of the companies is not relinquished by the government.

In a statement accompanying the formal order the postmaster general stated that the existing rates would remain in effect, and that orders forbidding discharge of employees because of union affiliation also would stand.

Mr. Burleson's order turning back the wire properties read:

"The president having recommended the return of the wire systems and the control of the owning companies with certain legislation designed to stabilize their operation, and the senate committee having taken action looking to their immediate return, and the house committee in its hearings on the proposed legislation having indicated concurrence in the suggested immediate return with or without legislation so recommended, I feel it my duty to now return the actual control of operations to the companies.

"Some days ago I directed the necessary orders to be prepared to accomplish this and have today issued same. These orders do not affect questions of rates and finance with which the congress may determine to deal.

"The rates now in force and the financial relations between the government and the companies, and the order of October 2, 1918, prohibiting discrimination because of union affiliation will continue unless congress may decide to change them or the 'emergency' is terminated by the proclamation of peace.

"By the action now taken, however, the wire companies resume actual control of operations of their respective properties, and are free to formulate and put into effect their own policies unrestricted by government control, which is to continue in any case but a few weeks, and thus will be able to prepare themselves for a complete resumption of the management of their property.

"It will be necessary for each company to so keep its accounts during the continuance of government control that its books may be closed on the day government control ends in order that a full and accurate statement may be promptly made when it is called on for same."

85 DEAD; 48 HURT IN BLAST

Car Loaded With Powder, Attached to Train Carrying Miners in Pennsylvania, Blows Up.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., June 7.—Eighty-five miners were killed and forty-eight were injured on Thursday at the Baltimore No. 2 tunnel of the Delaware & Hudson Coal company, near here. The accident happened shortly before seven o'clock, while the men were being taken to their places of employment. A train of empty cars was provided to carry them down by an electric motor, with John McGonerty driving. Into these cars the 100 workmen were crowded and near the rear of the train was a car of black powder. When 200 feet in the tunnel the electric trolley wire fell. Sparks from it ignited the powder and the explosion that followed blew the men in all directions. More men died from flames and suffocation than from the explosion.

Within an hour and a half afterwards most of the injured had been removed. The injured were brought to the surface and placed in tiers along the green.

SENATE PASSES HOUSE RESOLUTION BY VOTE OF 56 TO 25.

Proposed Constitutional Amendment Now Goes to States for Ratification.

Washington, June 8.—The house woman suffrage resolution was adopted on Wednesday by the senate and the proposed constitutional amendment now goes to the states for ratification. The vote was 56 for adoption, and 25 against, or two more than two-thirds majority required.

The amendment was supported by 36 Republicans and 20 Democrats and opposed by 17 Democrats and 8 Republicans. It received two more votes than were needed to make the requisite two-thirds.

The suffrage amendment text follows:

"Article 1, Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex.

"Sec. 2. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article."

It was exactly 5:25 p. m. when President Protem Cummins, from the chair, made the announcement to the expectant crowds in the galleries who had sat through a tense all-day debate waiting for the final vote to be taken. He said:

"This resolution has received the affirmative votes of more than two-thirds of the senate, a quorum being present, and is declared to have passed the senate in accordance with the Constitution of the United States."

PLAN TO CUT WAR BILL

War Department Estimates to Be Reduced by House Body—Bills Prohibit Immigration for 5 Years.

Washington, June 9.—War department estimates for the coming year will be reduced at least $400,000,000 by the house military committee. Provision will be included in the bill for an army of 400,000, instead of 500,000, requested by the department. This reduction, members declared, would reduce the total estimate of $1,263,000,000 by 20 per cent. Bills prohibiting immigration for five years and placing more rigid restrictions upon aliens entering this country were introduced in the senate. One measure by Senator King (Dem.) of Utah would exclude alien anarchists and others who believe in the overthrow of governments through force.

SENATE FOR IRISH HEARING

Votes Request by 60 to 1 to Peace Conference in Paris to Receive Delegates.

Washington, June 9.—Senator Borah's resolution asking the American peace delegates at Paris to secure a hearing before the peace conference for the Irish delegates headed by Edward De Valera, provisional president of the Irish republic, was adopted on Friday by the senate, 60 to 1. Senator Williams, Democrat, of Mississippi, cast the negative vote. The resolution expressed the sympathy of the senate in the aspirations of the Irish people for "a government of its own choice."

NATIONAL ARMY MEN ARE ON WAY

Homeward Movement of Former Guards From France Is Complete, Says March.

REGULARS TO LEAVE SOON

Chief of Staff Declares 333,305 Troops Sailed During May—Five Battalions Leave U. S. to Replace Emergency Fighters.

Washington, June 10.—Homeward movement of National Guard and National Army combat units from France is complete, Chief of Staff March announced on Saturday, all units having embarked for this country.

The movement of regulars has begun, General March stated. The Sixth division began its sailing this week.

The army, General March said, was 65 per cent demobilized June 5. In France there remain 604,745 officers and men.

All embarkation records were broken in May, he said. Sailings from France totaled 333,303.

Enlistments in the regular army to date total 48,023 men. These figures do not include enlistments at army camps this week.

Since the recruiting campaign started five battalions of troops, totaling 4,020, have sailed for France to replace emergency men in regular army units.

Replacements for the emergency men in Siberia will be made from men who have not asked for service in any special place. General March said he expected no difficulty in solving the problem of obtaining the 10,000 men necessary for replacements in the Siberian expedition.

"The Siberian problem is a problem by itself," General March said, "and the war department will be in a position to solve it. In the general list of figures you will note the places to which the men wish to be sent:

"France, 10,219; Siberia, 40; Philippines, 2,046; Panama, 154; Honolulu, 1,230; Alaska, 24.

"Those who have specified their place of service aggregate about 14,000 out of the 50,000. We have, therefore, 36,000 men who enlisted without saying to what place they wish to be sent, and of course, they will go where they are sent. In the meantime, the option continues for those who wish to enlist to specify their place of service."

General March gave figures which showed that in the recent A. E. F. rifle matches the lowest score made by a man using the Springfield rifle was higher than the highest score made by substitute Enfields.

TERMS TOO SEVERE—AUSTRIA

President Seitz Tells Assembly Peace Conditions Are Impossible and Country Will Starve.

Vienna, June 10.—The peace terms presented to Austria are impossible and mean the death of the country by starvation, President Seitz said in his address opening the extraordinary session of the national assembly. Foreign Minister Bauer made a report on his conference at Feldkirch with Doctor Renner, head of the Austrian peace delegation. After declaring that the treaty was a peace of hate, the foreign minister released his personal views of wrath against the Czechs, who, he said, had taken all of Austria's sugar and other industries. The loss of German Bohemia, he added, meant not merely the subjection of 3,500,000 Germans to foreign rule, but the loss of the most valuable parts of German Austria, industrially and culturally. Doctor Bauer said the people of the Tyrol, who love freedom above life, would never submit to the peace terms and that they, as well as the Germans of Bohemia, had the sympathy of all Germans.

Farmers Want the Daylight-Saving Law Repealed

WASHINGTON.—"By Mr. Romjue: A bill (H. R. 282) to repeal the daylight saving law; to the committee on interstate and foreign commerce. By Mr. Andrews of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 283) to repeal section 3 of an act to provide standard time for the United States, approved March 10, 1918; to the committee on interstate and foreign commerce."

These are samples of bills which crowd the Congressional Record these days. There are also memorials from state legislatures asking for the repeal of the daylight-saving law. As for petitions, they are legion.

In general, the agricultural communities want the law repealed, and the urban communities think it is a good thing. It is merely human nature that those who want it repealed are making the bigger showing. Representative Mann of Chicago says of the general situation:

"The people in Chicago and other cities favor a continuance of the daylight saving law, while those in the country are for its repeal."

The national war garden commission put the case this way: "An idea of what this extra hour of daylight meant to the war gardeners of the country may be gathered from the actual amount of working time it presented as a free gift to the home food producers. This extra hour given each afternoon to the war gardener meant a total of 182 hours during seven months of working days each. Multiplying this figure by the number of war gardeners in the United States—5,285,000—it gives the stupendous aggregate of $80,000 hours of time, or 320,407 years of eight-hour days."

Senator Calder of New York, author of the bill, says in part: "It saved formerly spent. It saved at least 1,000,000 tons of coal."

Of course the farmers and the communities which live by the sun rather than by the clock have arguments on their side. It looks like a warm contest in congress.

Homeward Bound Exodus of Foreign-Born Americans

NOW that the Sixty-sixth congress is in session and is getting ready to argue the question of suspending immigration for four years, the administration has discovered that emigration of foreign-born citizens and residents of America to their native lands has set in and is about to materialize on a larger scale.

This unexpected development will have an important bearing upon the consideration of the immigration question, if it appears that workingmen are leaving the country permanently in large numbers.

The bill to suspend immigration for four years, which the last congress was advocating, and by the American Federation of Labor, at also by persons who would stem the tide of anarchy setting toward America.

Aside from those emigrating because of lack of employment there appears to be two well-defined classes of foreign population who are going back to their native lands. One class is composed of those who are going back to their native lands in the war-devastated regions and who intend to return to their native lands in most instances bringing their kin with them before the immigration suspension law.

The other class comprises natives of the liberated countries of Europe, such as Czechs-Slovaks and Jugos-Slavs, who are going back to their native lands to escape tyranny and now intend to return in the belief that they can live peaceably and happily under the conditions of the new regime.

Helgoland Island May Be Made a Bird Sanctuary

ONE of the possible ironies of the great war is the use of Helgoland Island as a bird sanctuary. At a recent meeting of the British Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, a resolution to this effect was passed and the proposition has been received with considerable favor in England. Although Helgoland is separated from England by most of the breadth of the North sea it is believed that the establishment of a bird sanctuary on the island will be of benefit to many of the British birds. It will give them a breeding place safe from molestation, and many birds may come to English shores.

A stranger transformation than that proposed for Helgoland could scarcely be imagined. During the war the little island was a bustling fortress. It was the keystone of Germany's naval defense. For years before the war it had been prepared for precisely the role it played. The handful of inhabitants were isolated from the rest of the world and naval works of stupendous magnitude were carried out. Throughout the war Helgoland loomed as a great stronghold of German might. It was a name hated in Great Britain. Its strength forbade any great attack on the German coast and gave the Germans a handy base for their raids against England.

It is a pleasing fancy to think of Helgoland as a paradise for birds. It is agreeable to picture this grim fortress, this iron and concrete embodiment of militant Germanism, as given over to a use so idealistic and utterly un-German. Helgoland's reincarnation as "Cloud-Cuckoo-Land" could be altogether fitting.

Birdmen With Cameras Are Mapping the Country

TO GATHER by photography all the materials for a map including the elevations of hills and mountains, while flying over it in an airplane will be possible within a few years, in the opinion of F. H. Moffit, the geological survey, who, together with Maj. J. W. Bagley of the engine corps and J. B. Mertie, also of the survey, has been at work for many months on the use of cameras and airplanes for map making.

These scientists are developing a method of making accurate maps by aerial photography of all features which show in the horizontal. That is, they can now make a map which will show the stream and lakes, the roads, railroads, farms and cities, but which will not yet show the elevations in any distinctive reliable way.

They have, however, devices with which they are experimenting on the problem of topographic mapping from the air.

The importance of this use of the camera and airplane in mapping can scarcely be exaggerated. The geological survey, the consular geodetic survey, the national park service and other branches of the government doing work spend thousands of dollars every year in making maps. Until a few years ago this entailed going into the country and manually mapping the topography by the plane-table method—work requiring much time and fine weather.

Now that the plane has become a stable and reliable, the inspiring possibility opens up of mapping the wild mountain peaks of Alaska, for example, with detail and accuracy while passing over at the rate of 100 miles an hour.

This will be as far removed from the method of the time topographer toiling through the wilderness with his load of instruments as the automobile is from the ox cart.

IDEAL FARM LANDS

Missota Man at Last Found What He Sought.

A Long Search, the Wondrous ductiveness of Western Canada Was Pointed Out, and He Is Going There.

farmed for a number of years in Wisconsin, Minnesota, and as Mr. Marcy told it, he had done well. He had made sufficient money to see and his wife through their remaining days.

But there were the boys, said Mrs. Marcy, "and six of them, too—some of six not yet back from overseas." "We are proud of them," the fond other said, "but, oh my, we had no money, and she demurred that. These boys had to be looked after. 'Why not settle them about you in your own neighborhood? You have good land here, splendid neighbors, and everything that might be desired.'"

"Yes, that is all true," replied this estimable lady, "but the land is so high-priced we couldn't afford to buy there, although worth every cent asked for it. You see we have six boys, and they are good ones, too."

So, one day, three years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Marcy rigged up the automobile for a touring trip. They wanted to investigate for the boys' benefit. The journey lasted for a year. It took them through Arizona with its varied scenery, its climatic and agricultural attractions; into the canyons of Colorado they went, and the agricultural possibilities there aroused a large amount of interest. Still undecided, down into the valleys of California the automobile went. Fruit orchards were plentiful, grain fields were attractive, but the psychological time had not arrived. Reversing their way, they passed through Washington, Oregon and Montana and home. A year's journey and no results. "Oh, yes," Mr. Marcy said, "we had a delightful time, enjoyed it all but the day and night up in Colorado, when we were held up by a wonderful snowstorm; we and six others, planking the snow embankment, we came through safely, if a trifle inconvenienced."

It was interesting to hear these people talk. Their practical minds showed that they had not lacked opportunities for observation. They could not find what they wanted for the boys. When he was between twenty and twenty-five years of age, Mr. Marcy pictured to himself the kind of a home he wanted. He reared a family of boys and had yet to find such a place. His year's journey had been fruitless in that respect.

One day he decided he would try what Western Canada could do. He had read of it, and he had friends there who had done well. He toured the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. He saw the vast prairies, yielding their twenty and twenty-five, and as high as forty bushels of wheat, with enormous yields of other grains. The north central country, which afforded the grass and the shelter that made stock-raising a valuable adjunct to the growing of grain, was visited, interviews were had with the settlers, many from his own home district, and all were satisfied.

Only the other day he arranged for a car in which he will load his effects to be taken to the Alberta farm he had purchased when on his visit. Mrs. Marcy goes with him, and the six boys will follow. He found the place he had pictured in his mind when he was twenty or twenty-five years old. "I was unable to find it until I made my Western Canada visit. I bought the farm, and I am satisfied. When I saw a carload of four-year-old steers brought into the Edmonton market, weighing 1,700 pounds, that had never been inside a building nor fed a bit of grain, I was glad I had made up my mind."—Advertisement.

Peel Chicken.
Three-year-old Kitty was visiting her grandmother, who lived on a farm. Everything about the farm was a novelty to the child. Another pleasant thing about the visit was grandmother's constant questioning of: "Now, what shall we eat today?" One morning she asked the usual questions as to the menu. Little Kitty thought a minute and then answered: "Oh, grandma, won't you please catch a chicken and peel it for dinner?"

Dead Statute.
"This is an enlightened community," "Tow's that?" "If a landlord refuses to rent an apartment to a couple with children he can be haled to court and fined." "That's the right idea. How does it work?" "Not worth a cent. There's no law to prevent a landlord from boosting the rent to a prohibitive figure."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Where She Was Sick.
A school physician was examining the pupils of the first grade. He looked at one child's throat and asked her the usual line of questions, first saying: "Where were you sick?" The little girl naively answered: "In bed."

Requires Olive Oil.
Although olive oil as a food and medicinal oil can be replaced very largely by other vegetable oils, there are one or two technical uses, wool spinning, for instance, for which no entirely satisfactory substitute has yet been found.

KEEP YOURSELF FIT!

You can't afford to be laid up with sore, aching kidneys in these days of high prices. Some occupations bring makes weak kidneys worse. If you feel tired all the time, and suffer with lame back, sharp pains, dizzy spells, headaches and disordered kidney action, use Doan's Kidney Pills. It may save an attack of rheumatism, dropsy, or Bright's disease. Doan's have helped thousands back to health.

An Iowa Case
Mr. A. Simmons, shoe merchant, Maquoket, Iowa, says: "My kidneys were weak and my back ached constantly. I lifted anything or bent over, there were sharp pains through my back. My head ached frequently. I couldn't rest well at night and awoke in the morning feeling all thrashed out. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and two boxes cured the attack."

A Lemon.
Two couples were strolling slowly around Monument Circle. A boy approached one with a bouquet of roses pleading that the man buy. The woman stopped, looked down at the boy, and said: "You needn't mind, boy. He won't buy. He's my husband."

LET WHISTLERS BE WARNED

New York Newspaper Is Emphatic in Its Declaration of Uncompromising Hostility.

Reader, have you ever been made frantic and exasperated beyond measure by some man whistling in your neighborhood? Did you ever sit in a tram car and hear one of these nuisances blow noises out through puckered lips? If you have, you can well sympathize with the unidentified person who listened to Moses Cohen whistle in a local motion-picture theater and arose and slew him on the spot. We regret the killing; it was uncalculated for; unlawful; dreadful; not to be tolerated. Law sleuths are on the track of the killer, and, of course, as upholders of law, with almost puritanical vehemence we hope he will be caught. And yet . . . persons should not whistle in cinema theaters, or in tram cars, or in the streets, or in shops, or in newspaper offices, or any other place on the face of the green earth where they can be heard. We have spoken.—New York Evening Telegraph.

Making Everything Easy.
"You favor the split infinitive?" "I do." "And you think the use of a singular verb with two nouns is sometimes permissible?" "If you happen to feel that way about it." "On what grounds?" "Reform. Spelling reform has made good progress in simplifying education. Now I think we're about due for some grammar reform."

It is a great deal easier to find an engine than it is to find an engineer.

Good Thing to Remember.

For grit in the eye apply a drop of two of castor oil; it relieves the irritation.

Law of Falling Bodies.
Since a body falls to the ground in consequence of the earth's attraction on each of its molecules, it follows that, everything else being the same, all bodies, great and small, light and heavy, ought to fall with equal rapidity. The fact that a stone falls more rapidly than a feather is due solely to the unequal resistance opposed by the air to the descent of these bodies. In a vacuum all bodies fall with equal rapidity.
